

ADVANCING THE TECHNICAL DEVELOPMENT, PRODUCTION, PROCESSING AND APPLICATION OF IRON AND STEEL

Plagiarism Policy

The Association for Iron & Steel Technology (AIST) seeks to maintain the highest standards in all activities to serve the steel industry. The AIST expects its members, authors and presenters to adhere to these standards within any AIST function or forum. This includes the development, submittal and presentation of written or electronic material for publication. Plagiarism within submitted work will not be tolerated.

Plagiarism is the practice of utilizing another's work or reproducing exactly or in close imitation another's written material without prior authorization from the author or without acknowledging the author of the original source. This would include but not be limited to charts, graphs, written word or mathematical formulations.

AIST will take the following steps in addressing potentially plagiarized material:

1. The author will be notified that the submitted work is being investigated.
2. The work will be removed from the AIST Digital Library during the investigation.
3. The AIST Technology Programs Staff Engineers will review the work to determine if the material meets the definition of plagiarism.
4. If the material is found to be acceptable as written, the author will be notified as such, and the work will be made available once again on the Digital Library.
5. If, in the final determination, the work contains plagiarized material, all electronic references of the work will be removed from AIST to prevent the plagiarized material from being distributed.

It is the opinion of AIST that the author's institution or employer is responsible for the thorough investigation of the plagiarized material. AIST will not be liable for any outcome related to this investigation.

If the author's institution or employer can provide sufficient evidence or information to deny the allegations of plagiarism, the work in question will be restored to all AIST media and a letter will be sent notifying all parties involved that the material was deemed to be free from plagiarism.
